that Birthday Night
I was born in a backwoods hospital on a day between Thursday and Friday a nothing time that I caught in my teeth held to the hard parts of being female against a tide of violence and a rising smell of guns in the air until I wiped it clean with the dust of desert sand and made fireworks from bed sheets to hang banner high on signal hills while my mother curled her body into the question of my existence