JOCELYNE DUBOIS

REPRODUCTION

I visit my pregnant sister and we eat in her living room in front of her aquarium full of neons & she lifts her hand-made dress to display her round naked belly & I watch & I take a bit of lettuce while she pokes & slides her fingers along her belly drawing invisible shapes of her unborn child & she takes my hand & holds it under her hand & over her belly — my other hand pokes lettuce with a fork & we sketch with one hand & eat with the other but I lose my appetite & when I leave I leave hungry.

Jocelyne Dubois short stories have appeared in The Dalhousie Review, Exile, and forthcoming in Transition.
