peace is ...
a world in which women can work together openly for their rightful place in society women imagine a peaceful world

peace is ...
a world in which women are safe within their own homes and free to come and go at will

In the midst of the trauma and terror of war, women continue to nurture life, and to give birth to new life. Women’s continued generation of life in a time when fear and death is everywhere, is peace-building at the deepest level.
For women, peace entails an absence of conflict in all areas of life, at all times. This means physical and sexual safety; political, economic, and social equality; and freedom at all levels of understanding and experience.

These words and images are an exploration of peace through women’s eyes.

Jennifer deGroot currently works for the UN Platform for Action Committee (MB) in Winnipeg coordinating a project on women and the economy. Her book, “Peace is ... women imagine a peaceful world,” a collection of photographs and quotes from women in India and throughout Africa, was published in 2001. The book is available at Mennonite Central Committee offices and Ten Thousand Villages stores across Canada or from Mennonite Central Committee Canada at www.mcc.org or 1-888-622-6337. Jennifer can be reached at <project@unpac.ca>