

KAY R. EGINTON

Morning Time

Framed in my mind
Sunlight flooding the window
Evergreen boughs. Snow sifts down
Birds fly by, a picture of morning

Twenty years have passed, also Objects of the past fill my days
Books, art, music step aside
Occasionally, but always sustaining

Can it be that this old house still stands?
This house of my mind
Witnessing a memory
Of innocence, when all

For me was young
And I strode the walks of the world
Free and ever looking up
Up toward the leading sun.

Morning time.

Kay R. Eginton lives in Iowa City, Iowa. Her poetry has been published in Lyric, an Iowa journal.

ANNE-MARIE BRUMM

Love in Tanka Time

After the show, I wanted to say I love you but instead we talked of your new CD, then you drove away in your jeep.

Undressing myself
in words, for the world to read.
You never noticed poised always on the narrow catwalk of life, what I wrote.

Silence, tourniquet
for my overflowing pain.
Poetry, balsam
for my suppurating wounds.
Your love, a distant doctor.

Silence clusters warm in the empty paragraphs of life, hope shoulders its way through shut doors filling a wordy letter with love.

The "tanka" is one of the oldest Japanese poetic forms describing an intense and highly personal emotional experience with a five-line 5-7-5-7-7 syllabic structure. Anne-Marie Brumm's poetry appears earlier in this issue.*

In honour of our 10th anniversary, The Linden School presents:

Coalition For Peace: Women Take Action
"Including women's voices at peace-tables worldwide"

Monday, March 31st, 2003, 7:00-10:00pm, OISE Auditorium, 252 Bloor St. West, Toronto

Speakers include:

Michele Landsberg, Toronto Star Columnist and Sally Armstrong, author, journalist and human rights activist.
Panel discussion with: Judy Rebick (moderator), political commentator, journalist, author, academic;
Dr. Carolyn Bennett, Member of Parliament; Jamea Zuberi, Associate Principal, The Linden School; Abdul-Rehman Malik, educator and community activist; Sarah Shteir, Linden Alumna now working for Women's International League for Peace and Freedom (New York City); Sheri Gibbings, graduate student at York University; Sarah Abu-Sharar, Coalition Against War and Racism; Adeena Niazi, President, Afghan Women's Organization; and Linden Students. Free Admission.