been active in the women's movement in Ireland since 1976 in the areas of violence, reproductive rights, and lesbian issues. She has just completed her book, Gender and Colonialism: A Psychological Analysis of Oppression and Liberation.

References

MARY CROWE

we forefront a movement perhaps ...

we forefront a movement perhaps in the sighs we make in the eyes the kisses between the thunderstorm and the heartbeats the spaces we create almost by accident

we have ruled the world sometimes when we have to us women

our little sleeps take significance among stars

Grandad

A 6-pack of Guinness in a brown paper bag
A big man in a box with an IRA flag Old Carlow brigade, 4th battalion Gunshots in the rain
And the spitting out of empty shells
Never to be seen again
My mother cries
I hold an umbrella
The army men move away
And I remember what he would say Happy the bride the sun shines on And happy the corpse laid to rest
In the rain
He will never be seen again
Outside the mind’s memory
St. Mullins will never be the same

Mary Crowe left Ireland in the late 1980s for London, England. A journalist at the Irish World newspaper, she also worked at the London Irish Women’s Centre, actively involved in issues concerning the Irish community. Returning to Ireland, she coordinated the Irish Diaspora Project in Dublin in 1995 before moving to Canada later the same year.