To White Feminists

by Carol Camper

You just can’t handle us having any real power.

You are not accountable to you for how our bodies look. And we don’t have to be “nice” to you and tolerate your prying.

You are not angry at us or your racism around every corner. Racism inhabits this society at a core level. If we weren’t constantly on our guard, we, as a people, would be dead by now.

Carol Camper is a Black lesbian writer, visual artist, mother, and women’s health worker. She is published in various anthologies and journals. She is editor of a Mixed Race Women’s Anthology, published by Sister Vision Press (due out this spring).
